1. The Athens money market is said to have been "flooded" by large quantities of gold bars from Italy. These bars are one kilo in weight, and of 24 karats (Venetian); they were being sold for 109 British gold sovereigns per kilo, which was cheaper than the gold pound by about 15 percent.
2. The gold is allegedly of Soviet origin and the bars have a stamped impression in "fire-red color" denoting the purity.
3. There are also circulating round, flat-shaped gold (pieces) of 82 grams, each of which is also stamped. These sell for nine gold pounds (sterling) each.
4. Recently, the demand in Athens for gold has been more than met. Consequently, these gold bars and pieces are also to be sold in Turkey.
